The view argued in my recent book Creating Competitiveness: Entrepreneurship and Innovation Policies for Growth (co-edited with Mary Lindenstein Walshok, University of California) suggests that such local policy makers, along with concerned constituencies such as businesses, non-looking for spurs to generate a strong economic performance in the wrong place. Rather than focus on what national or even supra-national governments can and will do for cities ...
